 (Supercedes IMOA921.E)

The seventh edition of Ships' Routeing includes details of traffic separation schemes and other routeing measures that had been adopted by the Maritime Safety Committee or by the IMO Assembly until December 1998. No appropriate amendments were adopted by the Maritime Safety Committee in 1999. Since then, existing traffic separation schemes and other routeing measures have been amended, new ones have been adopted and the General Provisions on Ships' Routeing have been amended; these amendments include, amongst others, the addition of the definition of mandatory no anchoring areas. The pages of the 2000 to 2003 amendments consist of additional pages, resulting from the adoption of new measures, and replacements for many of the pages of the seventh edition where these have been affected by amendments or by the adoption of new routeing measures. Pages show the date of adoption or amendment and the date of implementation of each traffic separation scheme or other routeing measure. By making appropriate substitutions of pages and additions to the pages of the seventh edition, it will include the amendments and additions that have been adopted up to December 2003.

MCA Equivalence for Admiralty Digital List of Lights

We are delighted to inform you that the UK Flag State, the Maritime Coastguard Agency has informed us that the above product has been Approved by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency.

Supply Problems

We have received the following from the UKHO regarding supply problems.

“I am writing to apologise for the current problems we are experiencing with supply of paper charts.

We recently installed some new software to control our chart production system, combined with some process changes in our Chart Correction Office. Unfortunately, this has led to an unforeseen temporary increase in the number of charts unavailable. We have identified solutions to these problems, but these will take 2-3 weeks to take effect.

In the meantime, please accept my sincere apologies for the unacceptable level of unavailable charts. Please reassure your customers that the problem lies wholly with the UKHO rather than with our distributors.”

Obviously we have done our best to fulfil all our customers orders with minimal amount of non-available products due to our own stock levels being sufficient, but we are gradually seeing improvements in deliveries of new stock.

Admiralty ENC Service

At the end of 2003, coverage in the Admiralty ENC Service had grown to include 320 Units comprising 518 cells that provide coverage of:

- UK
- Germany
- Netherlands
- Belgium
- Spain
- Portugal
- Gibraltar
- Malta
- Egypt (including Suez)
- Parts of the Caribbean
- West Africa (small scale)
- South Africa
- Sri Lanka and approaches (small scale)

Indian ENC coverage will become available in 2004, and high-level bilateral negotiations are ongoing with a number of other nations to expand this list. We hope to be able to make the following available very soon in 2004:

- Singapore
- Australia
- United States

The key features of the Admiralty ECDIS Service are :

- Electronic Navigational Charts (ENCs) and Raster Navigational Charts (RNCs) are combined within a single service. This enables users to benefit from the use of official ENC's on a global basis while coverage is still growing.

- The ARCS and ENC 'dual fuel' electronic chart combination satisfies IMO regulations for SOLAS chart carriage, and can therefore be used for primary navigation within ECDIS (with the appropriate back-ups).
- Coverage can be purchased for specific routes or areas of operation, and the UKHO provides ENC's where available, and ARCS charts where not. This ensures seamless coverage, even where ENC's are not yet available.
- New ENC's that correspond with existing ARCS coverage are automatically added to licences as they become available, at no extra cost.
- Weekly updates, New Editions, replacements charts, etc, are all included, keeping users fully up to date.
