Navigation for Masters 3rd Ed

Since the first edition of this published in 1995, communications have passed through a development explosion. No more so than the GMDSS requirements of 1999, and the approval of the fully operational ECDIS coming online. All aspects of navigation have experienced technological change. While the sextant is still discussed in historical content, it is the GPS (U.S. Military Controlled) that has dominated the future of position fixing. Satellite systems are here to stay and GPS has shown itself to be the most successful of Satellite Navigation Systems. It must be anticipated that the civilian controlled European System, 'Galileo' which received the official go-head in 2002 will be operational by 2008/2009. The advances of modern systems can still be enhanced by the reliability, accuracy and continued availability of such stalwarts as : Radar, Echo sounder and the three point visual bearing.
